

This technology will deliver a new level of interactive, organic, and tactical player reactions. Using this technology, AI intelligent algorithms learn to predict the player’s decisions and reactions and react accordingly on the pitch. Players in motion capture suits (referred to as MCTs) will reflect and respond to player movements on the pitch in a new physics-based system. This technology creates a realistic and natural player behavior: Moving into space and striking on goal, performing long-distance dribbles, going for a player-on-player tackle, or feinting for the ball, players will make physical reactions. For example, if a player takes a sudden step after receiving a pass in the air, FIFA 22 will detect that movement and create more coverage for the pass. This includes physics-driven reactions, such as defensive adjustments made after the initial pass reception. That pass, and all the possible passing options, will be covered by the FIFA team. HyperMotion Technology is built on the foundation of the successful L.A.X. (Learning Advanced eXperience) engine, reworked from the ground up. This new engine will allow a whole new level of player animation, physics and ball movement. The success of the L.A.X. engine was showcased during this year’s FIFA 19 Global Invitational, where the engine achieved new heights in game logic and game play. Created and implemented by a FIFA World Cup world-class engine development team, with help from a pioneering AI research team at Turn 10 Studios, the new engine will push the boundaries of football by delivering groundbreaking advances in physics, animation and AI. Moving forward, the HyperMotion Technology will be used to create a completely new player model and animations, that will be used across all video game genres and platforms. This new physical and organic animation will be accompanied by a completely new, full-featured animation customization system. The new animation system will allow each player to express their individuality and respond to the challenges of their opponents. FIFA 22 will be available on Xbox One, PlayStation 4, Xbox 360 and PlayStation 3. Recently, a technique to use a laser beam as a light source for recording and/or reproducing an optical information medium, e.g., a hologram memory, etc., has been proposed. In particular, a technique using a laser beam having a first wavelength for a
